‹Written from?› The writer quotes at length from an old journal on the subject of Americans in general. The article says (among other things): "No American that I have ever seen will acknowledge fully the guilt of his nation or of his own relations in the matter of slavery. He will always have some poor paltry excuse. Mrs. Stowe is true to her national character in striving to whitewash her father and husband for their past conduct. ..."

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

«Fall River, Mass.» The writer will send some money in a few days. It should be credited to the Female Society in Dighton. Learned a few months ago that no lecturing had been done and the Liberator is the only publication received (in Dighton?). A society was formed (by the writer?) which suffered "much reproach," which some of the members were unable to bear. The writer encouraged them and succeeded in collecting a little money.
